Choosing the accurate amount of training or professional services required for a project is difficult...

Project delivery is not an exact science. Establishing timescales, defining the use and requirements of internal and external resources can be difficult to quantify. Availability and skill sets within project teams vary, the introduction of new products and the subsequent learning curve affects productivity levels.

Retaining a certain level of experience and expertise within a project is essential and reduces risk. Elyzium's Adaptive Delivery capabilities help you to meet these changing requirements should the need arise.

Adaptive Delivery enables clients to overcome these problems by attaining 'credits' in advance which can then be redeemed against consulting or training as and when you need it.

Its adaptable approach allows clients to plan resource requirements for adhoc projects and ongoing programmes of work, and stretch budgets with prepaid service days.

Often the requirement for these services can occur outside budgetary periods or training and consulting budgets are dealt with by different departments. Adaptive Delivery's flexible nature allows disparate cost-centres within organisations to benefit from the concessions offered.
